Excerpt: . . . the date of the transaction a single day. While surveying; with complacency, the metamorphosis in his appearance, she even began to make overtures touching his return to her maternal care; but her eye falling accidentally upon his left hand, which was neatly wrapped up in a black silk handkerchief, she stopped suddenly short--for our landlady, be it known, was not only an honest, but a modest and sensible woman, as times go. William took leave of her in perfect good humour; and now, his arrangements for the present being completed, he set himself seriously and anxiously to prepare for the future. Among the thousand schemes which suggested themselves he could not find one which suited at the same time his means and inclination. Either his capital was too small, or his knowledge too little; one plan was too mean, and another too ambitious, and a...
